

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Assessments

By Dr Karen Nicholls

There is a disproportionate burden of disease for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples compared with other Australians. Engaging Aboriginal and/or Torres Strait Islander peoples in their health care can assist with risk factor modification and management of chronic disease. The approach needs to be both consultative and holistic within the health beliefs of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities.

The 715 Health Assessment is a tool to assist with identifying the patient's priorities and concerns, as well as identifying risk factors and allowing a more holistic approach to the patient care. The aim of the 715 Health Assessment (more commonly known as the health check) is to help ensure that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people receive primary health care that best meets their needs, by supporting their health and wellbeing and facilitating early detection, diagnosis and intervention for common and treatable conditions. If done properly, the 715 Health Assessment can be a very powerful tool for engagement of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander patients in their health care.
