General Practice Supervisory Relationship Measure (Supervisors)

The GP-SRMS measures the supervisory relationship from the supervisor's perspective and is completed by the supervisor in regard to an individual registrar. The GP-SRMS was developed for use in the Australian general practice sector.

The GP-SRMS provides a measure of:

- Safe base – the extent to which the supervisory relationship is enthusiastic, open, and collaborative.
- Supervisor investment – the efforts of the supervisor to support the registrar through resources, preparation, and being interested and invested in the registrar's development.
- Registrar professionalism - perceptions of how competent, responsible, organised, and committed a registrar is.

Using the results effectively:

- Remember that scores reflect the supervisor's perception of the relationship.
- Invite the registrar to share their perception of the relationship.
- Supervisors who are prepared to listen, validate the perceptions of a registrar, and accept criticism will build more effective alliances.
- Treat a problem as something which can be resolved together, rather than being the sole responsibility of the supervisor or registrar.
- Scale scores are more reliable than individual items.
